Micaela Arneson supports Brownstein's Government Relations team by tracking legislative and regulatory developments, keeping clients informed of policy updates relevant to their interests and analyzing the impacts of policy decisions related to international trade, defense, immigration, and U.S. foreign relations.

Before her time at Brownstein, Micaela worked with development organizations in North Carolina, Kenya, Honduras and Scotland. She supported small and large non-profit organizations by creating and publishing marketing materials, conducting audits of their programs and writing successful grant applications. As part of her graduate dissertation at the University of Edinburgh, Micaela worked with Glasgow's Child Poverty Action Group to analyze the impact of welfare policy in the United Kingdom on single, low-income mothers. The results of her research were used in engagements with the Scottish Parliament to enact policy reform.
