Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck reports $5,730,000 for its fourth-quarter 2016 federal lobbying revenues and a total of $25,605,000 for the year.

“We’re ending on a strong note during an election year with six new clients and new hires like Lori Harju that position us for another strong year in 2017,” said Marc Lampkin, managing partner of Brownstein’s Washington, D.C., office. “We anticipate our team will remain extremely active on tax and trade issues as well as healthcare, energy, infrastructure and financial services, to name a few.”

The numbers for the fourth quarter of 2016 were filed as part of the quarterly filing requirements under the federal Lobbying Disclosure Act.
