

Brownstein's Joshua Weiss Elected to Serve on the Center for Resource Conservation Board

Aug 30, 2016

Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck is pleased to announce that Joshua A. Weiss was elected to serve on the Center for ReSource Conservation (CRC) board of directors beginning December 2016. CRC programs provide impactful and practical ways to conserve natural resources across the Front Range communities in Colorado.

Weiss, an associate at Brownstein, focuses on a broad range of corporate and business law, including complex commercial disputes, regulatory compliance, internal investigations, False Claims Act defense, Department of Justice inquiries, business torts and professional liability. He has considerable experience representing clients in state, federal and appellate courts in a comprehensive motion and pleading practice that has included drafting complaints, answers, dispositive motions, appellate briefs, motions to compel discovery and other litigation matters.

The Center for ReSource Conservation's (CRC's) goals are to tackle resource conservation issues in the community, to provide accessible and affordable conservation solutions, and to reduce the negative environmental impacts associated with non-sustainable practices. The organization empowers the local community to put conservation into action in sustainable and measurable ways.
