

October 30, 2013

Three Brownstein Lobbyists Named to The Hill's 2013 Top Lobbyist List

Al Mottur, Marc Lampkin and Manny Ortiz, three members of Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck's lobbying team, were recognized in The Hill's 2013 Top Lobbyist List as "Hired Guns." In addition to the accolade, the publication noted that Mottur, Lampkin and Ortiz "are part of a lobbying team that is undoubtedly one of K Street's finest." This bipartisan team works to develop and execute winning strategies on behalf of a diverse range of clients. Brownstein is ranked number four among the country's top lobbying shops based on revenue.

Al Mottur, a shareholder in Brownstein's DC office, has been included in The Hill's list since 2011. He serves as the managing partner of Brownstein's Washington, DC, office and is co-chair of the firm's Government Relations department. Well known for his extensive experience in telecommunications policy in the Congress and at the Federal Communications Commission, Al has helped numerous major corporations develop and execute complex public policy advocacy strategies in the Congress and in many Executive Branch agencies, including the FCC, the FTC and the Department of Agriculture.

Marc Lampkin, a shareholder in Brownstein's DC office, has been included in The Hill's list since 2011. A leading Republican lobbyist and seasoned strategist, Marc brings veteran campaign, public policy and legislative strategy experience to his clients. He has a unique understanding of all aspects of policy development, public opinion, communications and the legislative process – and how they influence and impact each other. Marc's years on the Hill, his extensive relationships with administration officials and staffers on both sides of the aisle, at policy think tanks, trade associations and with the media have led to unofficial advisor roles for numerous members of Congress, cabinet officials and other leading Washington policymakers.

Manny Ortiz, a shareholder in Brownstein's DC office, has been included in The Hill's list since 2004. Considered "the young lobbyist with the most influence in Washington" by Washingtonian magazine, "Puerto Rico's go-to guy in Washington" by The New York Times and "one of Washington's Powerhouse Lobbyists" by CNN, Manny is a trusted advisor to Fortune 50 CEOs as well as politicians. Foreign governments and the world's leading corporate brands depend on him for his political ties, strategic advice and development of comprehensive government relations plans to advance and protect interests. Manny successfully represents his clients on complex issues in the halls of Congress, at the White House and with executive agencies.

Click here to learn more about Brownstein's Government Relations practice. Click here to read the full story from The Hill.

THE HILL
The Hill's 2013 Top Lobbyists

Al Mottur

Marc Lampkin

Manny Ortiz